The summer has been, and will continue to be, a significant factor in the use of the Internet, but for our development to respect the various uses, experiences, and technological levels—while also advancing us as a women's movement—we must proceed thoughtfully.

Throughout the organisation of the World March of Women, we have tried not to marginalise groups and national coordinations that did not have access to the Internet. However, this concern does not shield us from certain weaknesses.

The questions we are asking you on this topic will likely not be the last. We are at the very beginning of this information-gathering process, which is also a development process. Your responses will be brought to the meeting next March and will inform our reflections on implementing the necessary tools to improve mobilisation, information sharing, and organisation in preparation for future actions. It is important to consider the Internet as a malleable tool, one that we can shape according to our needs.

Questions for national coordinations

Question	Yes	No	Comments
Have you created a website as part of the March?
If you already had a website, did you add a specific section about the March?

Question (Enter your response: Poor – average – very good)	At the national level	At the regional or continental level	At the international level	Comments
How do you rate the contribution of the Internet - to mobilisation:
- to information sharing:
- to the organisation of the World March of Women:

	YES	NO	Comment
Have you used the following (provided by the international secretariat)?
- Display of the list of participating countries and groups, along with their numbers
- Online signing of the support card (and display of the number collected)
- Information on global demands			